Scope and three groups

The titles compared in this report

The entrants fall into three groups by their position on the Most Played list on Steam’s Next Fest page during the June fest.

- Final Top 50

50 titles

The 50 titles on the public Most Played list captured on June 23
- Briefly in the Top 50

65 titles

Ranked in the top 50 in at least one 30-minute snapshot during the fest, but not on the final list
- Never in the Top 50

4,303 titles

Never ranked in the top 50 during the fest

Most Played is the list Steam shows based on how many people play each demo. It is not a sales or wishlist ranking.

Release status four months on

As of October 19, 2,389 of the 4,418 entrants (54%) had launched, including 37 of the Top 50 (74%).

Share released, by release timing on the store page in June

	Top 50	All others
Specific timing in June	88% (23/26)	72% (1,501/2,073)
Said only “2026”, or no date	58% (14/24)	37% (851/2,295)

Within each timing group, more of the Top 50 had launched. But the Top 50 groups have only 26 and 24 titles, so one title shifts the rate by about 4 percentage points.

Review counts by release month for the June Next Fest titles

The 2,387 June Next Fest titles released by October 19 with a known review count, split by release month. Each band covers the middle half of titles (25th to 75th percentile), and the dot is the median.

The 334 titles released in June, just after the fest, had been on sale the longest, yet had the lowest median: 6 reviews, against 24 for September releases. These figures do not show that release month determined review counts.

Reviews by Top 50 placement during the fest

Titles grouped by their place on the Most Played list during the June fest. The final Top 50 has a median of 1,556 reviews, and titles never in the Top 50 a median of 13. Titles briefly in the Top 50 had 100+ reviews at almost the same rate as the final Top 50.

Within each publishing setup, the final Top 50 still had a higher share reaching 1,000 reviews: 57% vs. 1.7% for self-published titles and 69% vs. 5.8% for titles with a publisher. Among titles released by the end of August, the shares were 73% and 2.5%. Each Top 50 group here is small, at 16 to 22 titles.

The 80 titles with 1,000+ reviews

Of the 80, 23 were in the final Top 50, 16 were briefly in it, and 41 were never in it. Only 1.8% of the never-ranked titles reached 1,000 reviews, but 62 times as many never-ranked titles had launched as final Top 50 titles, so they are the largest group by count.

At a 100-review threshold there are 470 titles, and 435 of them (93%) were outside the final Top 50. Among titles released by the end of August, 33 of the 59 with 1,000+ reviews were never in the Top 50.

Followers before release • exploratory

Pre-release followers and 30-day reviews

A game’s follower count is the number of Steam users following it. Among the 792 titles with a pre-release count, the median 30 days after launch was 3 reviews for titles under 100 followers and 1,059 for those with 5,000-19,999.

All 7 titles with 20,000+ followers are Top 50 titles. All 792 titles were released in August or September.

Profile of the 57

How the 57 compare with released titles

Compared with released titles overall, the 57 have far more followers and are more likely to have a publisher. The share with specific release timing in June and the median days to launch are similar.

	1,000+ reviews outside Top 50 57 titles	Released titles 2,387 titles
Median followers Latest count, may be after release; 57 and 2,382 titles	7,485	83
Share with a publisher Developer and publisher names differ	40%	17%
Median positive review rate The 56 and 1,198 titles with 10+ Steam purchaser reviews	91%	87%
Share with specific timing in June Exact date, month or quarter	68%	64%
Days from fest end to release Median	46 days	45 days

Apart from Next Fest ranking, the number of followers a game gathered before launch moved closely with its reviews after launch. Across all pairwise comparisons of the 792 titles with a pre-release follower count (page 12), excluding pairs tied on either measure, the title with more followers also had more reviews 30 days after launch in 82% of pairs (about 50% if there were no association). The figure stays at 79-83% when self-published and publisher-backed titles, or August and September releases, are counted separately.

Conclusion

Summary

By October 19, just over half of June’s entrants had launched, and titles released since the fest have a median of 15 reviews. Titles in the final Most Played Top 50 were much more likely to have 1,000+ reviews, yet about 7 in 10 of the 80 titles with 1,000+ reviews came from outside it.

Reading these numbers

Every figure here shows an observed association. None shows that making the Top 50 caused what happened after launch. Most Played is not a sales or wishlist ranking, and the Top 50 is a small sample of 50 titles.

NEXT

We will track the October Next Fest entrants (October 19-26) after launch in the same way.

Scope and method

Titles and measures in this report

Titles analyzed

All 4,418 June 2026 Steam Next Fest entrants (June 15-22), the same set as in our June Next Fest report. Release status is the store status on October 19.

Most Played Top 50

The 50 titles on the public Most Played list on the Next Fest page, captured on June 23. “Briefly in the Top 50” means a title appeared in the top 50 of that list in at least one of the 30-minute snapshots taken during the fest.

Review counts

Cumulative reviews from every purchase source, as of October 19. Positive review rate and 30-day counts use Steam purchaser reviews. None of these are sales or player counts.

Followers and publishing setup

Followers are Steam game followers, recorded for each title about once a month from late July. A title counts as self-published when its developer and publisher names overlap.

Game Market Copilot continuously collects and aggregates Steam store and review data to help game developers and publishers make decisions with figures and AI tools.
